Flintknapping "The art of Making Stone Tools" By Paul Hellweg

By Judith D. Collins

My son already had this book and showed my husband and I some of the arrowheads he had made from raw Obsidian. He gave my husband some of the raw glass-like stones and loaned him the book. That's when I found the book on-line at Amazon. I ordered the book for him and one for myself. It is the most informative compilation of this art that i've ever seen.

Of course it has other tools you can make, stone knives with antler handles, rawhide wrapped axes, spearheads, hammers etc. It gives you pride to make tools yourself that you can use and show to your friends and family. I have seen arrowheads in museums that were found by archaeologists, and often wondered how they had been made. This book has all the answers for a beginner to get started and more. How to do the flaking, and the safety aspects of the glass shards from the flaking.

There is so much to learn from the pages of this book. It is also very reasonably priced, but worth so much more. We want to thank the author for this amazing book and also many thanks to Amazon for having the book available and all the other books i've ordered from you.

Sincerely, Judy Collins.

Short and sweet!

By Mike D. Burns

This book is a paperback with a limited number of pages. It is a great book to carry along with you when looking for workable flintknapping materials. The book gives concise instructions on making arrowheads, dart points, and spear points. Photos and drawings are done in black and white.

Make your own!

By Brenda Jo Ross

This book explains the techniques clearly and have accompanying photos. The author freely admits that it is better to learn in person, but if that isn't available (and it isn't in a lot of areas of the country), then this book can be very helpful. He stresses that knapping skills don't come in an afternoon's time, but that it takes a minimum of 200 hours or so of knapping to learn the feel and characteristics of stone.
