With one in four adults having been abused or maltreated as a child, Chris Tuck is trying to bring awareness of child abuse and the fact that it's happening behind closed doors in her powerful, new book, 'Through the eyes of a child'. As a child, Chris and her siblings could have wound up being just another statistic of child abuse. For them, it wasn't just one or a few isolated incidents, but a tidal wave of neglect, bullying, starvation and survival. Recent statistics show that nine out of 10 children who have been abused were abused by someone they knew, and this was the case for Chris and her siblings, who were abused by their parents and step-parents. Chris says: "Child abuse never leaves you. You're not supposed to be beaten, touched or starved when you're a child. Mummies and daddies are supposed to love you, not leave you, beat you, or molest your little sister." For many victims of child abuse, they never get over that experience and it will completely change the course of their life. Chris was determined that would never happen to her, and wants to give strength to others who have had the same experience by sharing her story. She says: "No matter what has happened in the past, it doesn't need to dictate your future." Drawing on her own traumatic experiences, Chris Tuck is the co-founder of "Breaking The Cycle - Survivors Of aBuse" (SOB), a new support group for victims of child abuse. She also runs courses to help people to regain their confidence, their fitness and control over their lives. The group reaches out in a secret Facebook group and other social media to give victims a safe space to share their feelings and to get help in rebuilding their lives.

Heartbreaking, but trite

By Amazon Customer

This is a tragic tale of child abuse by an adult survivor who had two sets of abusive parents. Their behavior was criminal. The writing is rough and the narrative rambles. Details are lacking. Interestingly, the writer often mentions the old classic A child Called It. My research strongly suggests his was a fabricated story that made Pelzer a millionaire many times over. I do not doubt Tuck's sincerity for a second, but this is not an engaging read. The story has been told many times and much better by others. The book seems more about launching a career as a lifestyle coach than drafting a memoir.
